

Two more BC libraries select Relais ILL & Access

For immediate release

January 15, 2007

Trinity Western University located in Langley, British Columbia, and the University College of the Fraser Valley, Abbotsford, BC, have selected Relais ILL to automate their ILL and Document Delivery operations. The systems will include Relais Access web-based pages which includes the Relais Web Services software. Relais Access will interface with the library's GODOT system for user-initiated requesting and follow-up.

GODOT is a Simon Fraser University Library developed, open source web-based software package which enables library patrons to view the library's holdings for that item, whether in electronic format or in print, as well as other library's holdings. This is combined with the ability to request documents not in the local collection via Interlibrary Loan. Several BC libraries are presently using the GODOT/Relais interface.

Clare MacKeigan, General Manager of Relais International, says "We are delighted that the University College of the Fraser Valley and Trinity Western University has selected Relais International as their ILL and Document Delivery System vendor. They will be our sixth and seventh customers in BC and we hope that more libraries will join this diverse group".

Relais International will host the system for Trinity Western University from our offices in Ottawa, Canada. The University College of the Fraser Valley will host the Relais system on their own server. The Relais ILL systems will be implemented by spring 2007.
